Hey, I've been busy being sick and getting the kids settled but I had to get this off my chest. Its been bothering me for some time now. The situation at the school put you in an awkward position I understand and respect that. However I feel as though you didn't fight for me, not as your cousin but as a guest in the building who has helped almost every staff and student there. The situation with Ms. [REDACTED] occurred and I ended it the day we had a conversation at your house. Then later I'm caught off guard with accusations that I've been "still causing trouble" when in actuality I was no where near any of that. That's not fair. I did everything I was supposed to and then some. Any and everything that I've done was positive in the school and to have this one person disturb that was not fair at all. In addition, Ms. [REDACTED] in actuality was going around that building telling people she will "F me up" "He don't want none of this", all this from a person who says "I have no problem with you and I think you're good with the kids and I like you here", those words out of HER MOUTH ! Yet she turns around and report me for "still causing trouble", right after I left when she was asked "Oh, Ms. [REDACTED] how are you today?" she then states "Im Good now!" with a smug look on her face. Now you tell me if that isn't deceit and spitefulness on her part. Not to mention she has had and still have issues with others, that supports that I'm not the issue AT ALL. I just feel like I wasn't treated fairly and it hurts that you didn't have my back, not as a cousin but as someone who came in that building supporting and caring for a group of individuals who needed that extra assistance, students and staff.

Hopefully you see and understand my view on the matter. I truly miss the vibe there and I know they miss me as well. Thank You.
